A SLUGGER'S METHODS.

NATURAL HISTORY OF THE "GENUS HOMO," SPECIES "PUGIL."

His Youthful Days-The Boy in Training-A Not Over Choice Vocabulary. Getting Anxious to Appear Before the Public-Ready.

The infant 'pugil' is not to be distinguished from other infants. It is only as he grows in years that those peculiarities develop themselves which stamp him as a son of Pollux. Should fortune smile upon his birth, and his friends have interest enough in him to obtain for him a post in the saloon of some veteran pugil, his virtues are soon discovered. The watchful eye of his experienced master soon detects the native boxer, and the eld warrior determines to bring out the young aspirant. Now the training of pugal commences in earnest—not the training which is practiced in schools, but quite a different sort of thing. He is taught, not to spell, but to run a mile in five minutes; not to write, but to branchish dumb belis; not to read, but to flourish clubs; not to cipher, but to suffer.

A pair of horsehalr stuffed gloves is bound upon his hands; he is placed in an easy, un-constrained position; the left leg is advanced rather more than half a yard; the left foot firmly but lightly planted on the ground, while he rests upon the toes only of the right; his bend is creet; his right arm is held across the body a few inches in advance of his chest, his left low down, with the cloow in a line with the hips, but swinging loosely from the shoulder—having compiled with which con-ditions he is initiated into all the mysteries of "hitting" and "counter-hitting", "stopping" and "in-fighting", the "suit in chancery", and the "cross buttock" and on special days, when a few choice tought are assembled at the festive Architects and Superintentents. Office in Ellott a board in his master's hospitable abode, a "brother pug" is set before him and the pur nobile fratrum have the privilege and satisfaction of hammering each other's faces and bodies with the gloves to the mingled admira-ore. tion and consternation of the distinguished speciations.

A CHOICE VOCABULARY.
A change is now observable both in his personal appearance and his vocabulary; his hair is cropped closer than of yore, so that more car is shown than is usual; his nose pratents a flatter and more polished surface than before, by reason of the frequent application of the plower; the bridge, too, is a little in-dented; his cheek bones also protrude unnut-MRS. He calls his brothron the "Fancy," he has no longer a head, but a "nut;" his has is "wool;" his forehead is his "frontisplece;" his nose is his "conk;" his eyes are "peopers," "ogles" or "goggles;" his mouth is his "potato trap," or "Risser," his teeth are "ivories," his face is his "mag;" his benth are "ivories," his face is his "mag;" his bands are "daudles," his fasts "manleys." that part of his body which receives his most and drink is, by a ringularly benutiful figure, denominated his "bread basket," and his legs he describes figuralizely as "pins," or jecosely as "understanding."

That find of which Harvey demonstrated the conductor of the proposition of the property of the proper differently, and the extraction of the san vocabulary in respect to some things, it is even measur with regard to others. This is most noticeable, perhaps, in the case of per-sons connected with the administration of justice, every one of whom, from the highest judge to the lowest police officer, is a "cop," the origin of which term is doubtful. They have a sincere regard for those law officers who are continually poking their ness in puglis business, which tends, they conceive, to breaches of the pence, and is by no means calculated and amount to interests of a com-
